KAREN FOLEY: Join the faculty of STEM on the 1st of October for a two hour refreshers programme on what I wish I knew before starting to study STEM with the OU from four different perspectives. This event is for anyone returning to study, not just newbies. There'll be advice for everyone at any level. So whether you're a brand new student to university studying, returning to your studies after a break, transferring into the OU, or from another qualification, no matter when your next module starts, and no matter what level of study you're at, there'll be something for you at this event.

It's also interdisciplinary friendly. While the students and staff are from the STEM faculty, their advice will have a very broad relevance. So please, do feel free to join us.

Does your perspective match your peers? Share what do you wished you knew before starting to study ahead of our events on our social media accounts. Just do a search for OU STEM on Facebook and on Twitter, or join in on the day by engaging in the live chat, or emailing us your suggestions. The event is online, interactive, and open to all OU students.

Find out more on our website, which is also where you log in to the event to join it live. But if you can't attend live, you can catch up later on our YouTube channel, where you'll be able to view the recording along with all our previous sessions. But I hope you can join us on October the 1st.
